spite of the fact that today globalization is a familiar name and it is mainly understood as financial changes and enhancement. It is defined as economic policy in a globalized situation where action system-specific global production, as the main goal of privatization and internationalization, is its underlying feature.

It is to be noted that fatal shots are the result of globalization. No doubt, it dreams of a developed and exploit less society, but today it shows and paves the way for exploitation of developing world by developed world, weaker and poor section by stronger section. In this paper, therefore, there is an attempt to discuss and assess all aspects and effects of globalization that led directly or indirectly to social change. In fact, social change caused by globalization has not only opened a new chapter in socio-economic history of the world but also paved the way for making the entire globe a single unit village.)

1. Introduction

Science and technology have been flourishing since the dawn of human civilization. Both are being working for the betterment human lifestyle. They are giving so many magic tools by which human beings are making their life cozy and comfortable. In a reverse way we can say that human beings are making science and technology to work. Human beings are leading their life and simultaneously facing the necessity of some things by which they can save their time, money and labour. They also want to have everything in their fist in no time. They want to take the world in their fist so that they can easily communicate with their near and dear ones. In short, they want to be global citizen. Hence, science and technology are day by day advancing and offering new magic tools to satisfy the demand of the pleasure-loving human beings. In this process we are observing that our society is undergoing sea-change and technology is mostly credited for this social
